FARM CENSUS TO BE TAKEN IN APPOMATTOX COUNTY

Farm census enumerators for Appomattox county, will be named soon and will begin their work of information as a part of the 1940 general United States census. County agent R. B. Hudgins has sample copies of the farm census. The list has a total of 232 questions. When tabulated for the entire United States, the data will give a true picture of farm information.

The county agent states that allotments for cash crops are determined on a basis of census information, and that it is important that each farmer cooperate with the census enumerator and furnish the answers to questions asked.

The census of 1940 provides for collection of detailed information on the state of agriculture, and is also the centennial of the first agriculture in 1840. In a review of agriculture 100 years ago and now, Dr. Arthur G. Peterson, senior economist of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, compares agricultural statistics of 1839 with current information.

"A hundred years ago," he says, "about the only current statistics relating to agriculture were those on international trade and the market prices quoted in newspapers. Some newspapers recently had begun to report local receipts or sales of livestock and some other farm products. Sporadic attempts had been made by agricultural societies and agricultural journals to collect statistics on acreage, yield, and production.

"The three New York State censuses of 1835 and earlier contained agricultural statistics. The first agricultural survey of a comprehensive nature was authorized by the Massachusetts Legislature in April 1837 and was conducted by Henry Colman between 1837 and 1850. Several states had made geological surveys before 1839.

"The sometimes unreliable news brought by a ship captain regarding crop conditions in Europe often created a panic in our Eastern grain markets. The lack of current and reliable price information placed producers in a weak bargaining condition.

"Henry L. Ellsworth, Commissioner of Patents, urged Congress a century ago to provide for the collection of statistics on agriculture and expressed the opinion that information of this kind would tend to prevent 'unjust speculations of the monopolists.'

"Our abundant agricultural statistics and agricultural and outlook information are in marked contrast to the situation a century ago. The 1840 and 1940 census schedules relating to agriculture are about as unlike as a flea and an elephant.

SALES OF APPLIANCES FOLLOW POWER LINES

Active increase in the use of electrical appliances by rural cooperatives financed by Electrification is reflected in responses to a survey among members of 123 cooperatives announced by REA. Of 1,000 questionnaires received from nearly 500 of those queried.

In addition to revealing a large proportion of members owning various types of appliances, the survey showed that, besides lighting, the hand iron and the radio are the most popular items in farm families and more families would buy when power comes in.

The ten appliances in most use in July 1939, it was found, had an average of 11½ years of service were: hand iron, 23; radio, 82; washing machine, 32; vacuum cleaner, 21; heating stove, 20; motor up to 1 horsepower, 16; cream separator, 14.

In a relatively small number of 1939 replies could be found against those made a decade ago, it was possible to estimate purchases and those in the next year. Refrigerators showed 22 per cent to 39 per cent; vacuum cleaners from 18 per cent to 31 per cent; hand irons from 14 per cent to 21 per cent; from 14 per cent to 21
